WHAT AILS OUR JEWISH YOUTH?

This question is being asked by parents, teachers, rabbis and communal leaders. One thing all concede, and that is, that the Jewish youth on the whole is not interested in things Jewish, that it is rather indifferent to and ignorant of things Jewish, that it is caught up in a mad rush for pleasure and thrills.

Nothing is so heart-rending to Jewish leaders as the apathy of the Jewish youth. Our leaders feel like generals without an army. What is the use, say they, to dry the very marrow out of your bones, thinking, planning and working for the future of the Jew and Judaism, when the Jewish youth is thinking jazz, and how to "have a good time," and knows so little about the hazardous position that our people are in? Of what avail can all the planning and working for the survival of Judaism be, if those who must be the instrument of this survival, the links in the chain, are not interested and even apathetic? Is it any wonder that many of our leaders become pessimistic about the future of the Jew and Judaism in America?

And yet as I examine the situation I find that what ails the Jewish youth is what ails the non-Jewish youth, only more so. For what is it that everybody notices about youth to-day. It is the craving for excitement, absorption in the superficial, material pleasures of life, honouring the Ten Commandments more in the breach than in the observance, loudness of speech, immodesty of manner and dress, a tendency to "follow the crowd," a lack of initiative and absence of a sense of individuality, a revolt against authority, a wild desire for a certain type of freedom which is more license than liberty. It is seldom that one finds youth concerned with life as if it were serious business. Our young people, uncritical in the main, become the Main Streeters, the Babbits and the usual hundred-percenters. Our Jewish youth of the first and second generation are quick to become infected with the ailments from which youth in general suffers. In their zeal for assimilation our Jewish youth are all too prone to imitate the cheap tawdry, tinsely things in their environment, mistaking them for true culture, refinement and character.

Now the causes which have produced this condition of affairs in the youth are not of the youth's making. They are due to several factors. New inventions, especially those of locomotion and communication made us all restless. The motor car and the telephone have revolutionized people's outlook. Staying at home is a thing of the past. "Let's go" has taken its place.

Women and girls are no longer sheltered as they used to be a generation ago. The social contacts between men and women are freer and fuller because of the opportunities of meeting which the shop, factory, office and co-education offer. The reserve and modesty of girls that used to be, no longer are, and it is curious to compare how many things girls now do with impunity which have been accepted as perfectly proper, that their mothers would have been ashamed to do at their daughters' age. The freedom between the sexes has created a very serious problem to both sexes. The popular conflict between science and religion has given many of our youth half-baked ideas which have led them away from synagogue and church attendance, and the ceremonial observance of a generation ago. Our moral ideas are changing, our political and economic theories are undergoing revolution, everything in modern civilization seems to be in a seething cauldron. It is but natural therefore that this restlessness should communicate itself to our youth. Their restlessness is but their reaction to modern life.

When we are considering the factors that have led youth to its present hedonism we must not fail to reckon with a new cult at whose altars youth now worships. It is the cult of self-expressionism preached by scamp psychologists in the name of Freud. In this new doctrine of self-expression our critical youth has found a cause to justify the release of its animal nature and the unbridling of its lower passions. Self-expression, according to the new school of psychology, teaches that all our instincts are God-given and hence require free play and expression. Our attempt to suppress and repress them, because of puritanical conventionality and moral laws, are dangerous and responsible for all our mental and physical ailments. They compare our repressed ideas and suppressed impulses to live steam which is shut up in a boiler without a safety valve to let off the surplus steam that accumulates. They say that Nature is constantly creating such surplus "steam" in our systems, which unless let off must cause an explosion of the nervous system. Thus our young people are led to believe that if they observe all the moral "don'ts," and suppress their animal nature, they are running the risk of a frightful mental and neurotic explosion. In the name of psycho-analysis, the cry is raised, "Away with moral inhibitions and puritanical conventionalities — let us have freedom."

Every reputable psycho-analyst who understands Freud assures us that what is termed self-expressionism is sheer nonsense. It is true that there is more restraint in society to-day than would be necessary if people were sensible enough to control themselves. In this case we would not require so many moral laws. Each person's conscience would be his own moral censor. It is also true that every repression involves a psychic and emotional conflict, but this is only stating one-half of the truth. Self-expression is a half truth, and half truths are oftentimes worse than lies. To understand Freud it is essential to complete the half truth. According to Freud suppression and repression are not harmful provided the person can do it successfully. The problems of psycho-analysis arise only when the suppressions are incomplete and unsuccessful. In these cases the solution is not that people should break out and give free play to their instincts, but rather learn to train themselves to sublimate their lower instincts so that they serve higher instead of lower ends. The surplus animal energy which Nature stores up in us need not worry us. Our psychic systems are so organized as to allow for it to be worked off in physical exercise and thus be made to serve our physical and mental and moral well-being. Whereas when this energy is worked off in immoral dissipations it results in the loss of our respect and our physical ruination. Analysis of our instincts also shows us that Nature has endowed us with a system of checks and balances, without which we could not survive. Thus our fear instinct leads us away from the edge of the cliff to which we may have wandered and keeps us from throwing ourselves into the abyss towards which we are prompted by the

GERMAN ANTI-SEMITIC LOSES CASE

Theodore Fritsch of Leipzig, an anti-Semitic agitator who wrote an inflammatory book against the Jews based on his own translation of a passage in the Talmud, and then offered 10,000 marks' reward to any one proving the translation wrong, was forced by the court of appeals to pay the reward to Ludwig Hollaender, head of the Union of German Citizens of the Jewish Faith.

Fritsch's book, which became the chief weapon in the hands of the anti-Semitic followers of Hitler and Ludendorff, purported to show that the Talmud forbade Jews ever to appear as witnesses in favour of a Gentile in a suit against Jews. Though Hollaender proved with the aid of leading scholars that the translation had twisted the sense of the passage, Fritsch refused to pay up until Hollaender sued and won.

Miss Edna Ferber, whose "So Big" won the $1,000 Pulitzer prize for the best American novel in 1924, has turned the cheque over to the Authors' League Fund for the care and assistance of old, sick and needy artists and writers. Miss Ferber has been a member of the board of directors since the fund's foundation and her letter simply stated that her gift was the "partial discharge of a credit obligation."

Oscar Solomon, of Middletown, N.Y., who accumulated a large fortune in the shoe manufacturing business, and formerly was widely known as a leader in that field, died suddenly of heart disease at the age of seventy-eight years in virtual poverty. No irritation for baby's skin

Do this and keep his clothing soft, pure and comfortable

Nothing is so sensitive as baby's skin! Even the slightest roughness in his diapers, shirts and bands will inflame and irritate it.

Much trouble is directly due to washing diapers with harsh soap—soap containing free alkali. The alkali clings to the little garments in the form of a fine, white powder—almost impossible to rinse out. This causes "diaper rash."

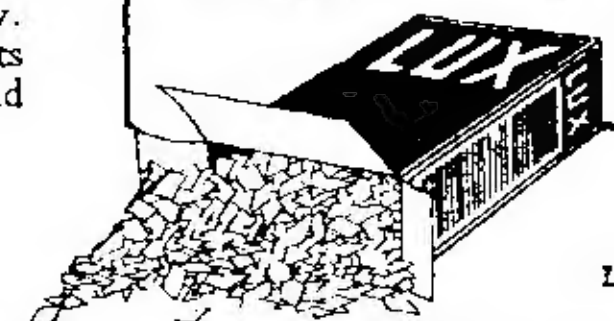

To save baby's skin, use Lux for washing all his clothes. It is the mildest, purest, gentlest cleanser in the world. Lux contains no free alkali, and the pure suds rinse out completely. Lux keeps baby's garments soft, clean, comfortable and safe!

Lever Brothers Limited,

How to wash diapers

Remove solid matter at once and soak diapers in cold water. Whisk two tablespoonfuls of Lux into thick suds in a tub of very hot water. Let diapers soak a few moments, then dip up and down, pressing suds repeatedly through them. Rinse thoroughly in three waters.

DEATH OF SIR DAVID LIONEL SALOMONS

The recent death of Sir David Lionel Salomons, which occurred in London on April 19, recalled to English Jews one of the most interesting chapters in English Jewish history. It was his uncle, also Sir David Salomons, who was the first Jew to sit in Parliament, although experimentally and without taking the prescribed oath. He was fined and mulcted in heavy costs, but he afterward bought the bench on which he had asserted his claim to represent a British constituency and an amended form of the oath having been substituted, he followed Baron Lionel de Rothschild in becoming a duly qualified member of Parliament. The first Sir David left no heirs and his baronetcy was bequeathed by a special decree to his nephew, who was practically adopted by his uncle. Sir David Lionel Salomons left three daughters, all of whom married out of the faith, so that the title now becomes extinct.

The deceased was only remotely interested in Jewish matters. His main interest was in mechanics, in which field he made several inventions and published several works of importance.

The new chair in the Philosophy of Law which was instituted at the University of Leyden will be occupied by Dr. Leo Polak, a native of Holland, who has had a most distinguished law career in Amsterdam.

Every Friday

When Dean Inge of the Cathedral of St. Paul's told reporters that the Jews should rebuild the Temple of Solomon in New York, "where they have the largest number of Jews and plenty of Gentiles to fleece," they received his remark with a nervous silence which has since been broken by many.

Shortly before sailing for England the Dean settled himself comfortably and said: "I have no axe to grind: bootlicking is not to my taste; and I strongly believe in speaking the truth, especially to those who seldom hear it." Whatever nests he stirred while here it cannot be said of him that he was inconsistent. As a frank, outspoken intellectual who refused to talk in platitudes the newspapers found him a tonic and a treat. They gave him the key to their columns and reporters grew more zealous over a big man who said single sentences of something than they do over smaller men who talk in solid paragraphs of nothing. Of course he is a scholar and perhaps a gentleman and, as he hinted himself, a judge of good liquor, but it is as a high-class entertainer that the Dean deserves attention.

As such he saved the best for the last. He deposited bombs in several non-Jewish quarters and with regard to the Jews at first only suggested that they rebuild the temple in New York. It was in an amended, farewell burst of confidence that he added "and plenty of Gentiles to fleece."

Interviewed on the subject, Louis Marshall, president of the American Jewish Committee, willing to hope for the best, asked plaintively, "Are you sure those were his words? Didn't he perhaps say where they have the largest number of Jews and plenty of Gentiles to please?" It was Samuel Untermyer's contention that "no self-respecting man of any denomination would care to dignify such a remark by paying any attention." But he said, in passing, that Dean Inge was a crank, bigot and ignoramus. Bishop William T. Manning, who by fair words got so much money out of Jewish pockets for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, gathered himself together rather jerkily and simply refused to believe that Dean Inge had said those harsh words.

The Jewish Morning Journal started out airily enough on the assumption that it was all just an unsuccessful jest of the Dean's, but the strain was too great to endure and a defensive editorial developed on the splendid relations between New York's Jews and Gentiles. The Jewish Daily News had no time for idle, introductory pleasantries. Doubting whether the Dean was civilized, it maintained from the start that he was "a man with a serpent tongue who knows no tact or courtesy, always uttering the pure truth in a vulgar and brutal way."

And so on. Now Dean Inge is no playful little fellow prolific in mere wise cracks. He is noted for telling what he believes to be the truth and evidently considers tact and courtesy of less importance. Maybe it is natural for the Jews to be irritated at his slam against them. But after all he is not the last word on all or any subjects. Millions of Gentiles live without guidance from him and will continue to, and those who read what he said about the Jews probably dismissed it with a laugh. If it is a pity that Dean Inge said what he did, it is too bad that, even with the laugh on them, the Jews could not get some fun out of it, too.

Such a thing as a gift of $1,125,000 to a Federation and an annual subscription of $50,000 from the same man has happened because a certain rich man believes that those who have money are responsible for those who haven't.

The giver is Frederick Brown, real estate dealer of New York, who came to America twenty years ago from Czecho-Slovakia and started in the retail clothing business. His donation to the Federation, made in the form of a trust fund to yield $50,000 annually, is one of the largest ever made to a charitable organization in New York while the donor was alive. Besides this, Mr. Brown's annual membership subscription begins this year and continues until his death for the support of the ninety-one agencies under Federation direction.

Mr. Brown's explanation of his gift is simple enough: "The responsibility of aiding unfortunate Jews of the country rests with those who have been successful."

The recent death of John Singer Sargent, the great artist, recalls the time, several years ago, when Boston Jewry made such an exhibition of itself over his picture,

"The Synagogue," a mural in the Boston Public Library. This picture in "The Pageant of Religion," shows a woman growing old amidst evidence of former splendour, her crown toppling from her head, in her hand a crumbling scepter. That was the way the artist saw the synagogue and such was his portrayal.

The Jews of Boston were up in arms about Sargent's representation and because they could not agree with his sentiment tried to have the picture removed. They called it inspired by anti-Semitism, a piece of propaganda, a slanderous picturization of Judaism, anything except a work of art and as such the privilege of the painter to express what he felt was true. The loudest shouters were not those who cared so much about Judaism that they did not love publicity as well if not more. They were politicians and others who rush to print and speech at any very welcome opportunity.

It was because Biblical subjects interested him that Sargent did the frieze of the prophets at the Boston Public Library, says the New York World. He did not mean to offend the Jewish people with "The Synagogue," and quite likely they were not more humiliated and dismayed than he at the storm of protest and dissension that broke about it. Sargent was known as a man of burly charm and wit, amiability and good humour, a born aristocrat who abhorred the hypocrisies of the social sphere he knew, and had a taste for genuine simple things. He was a debonair gentleman who, although he painted noses red when he found them so, was above all kind.

It is ridiculous for any one to call such a man an anti-Semite on the strength of "The Synagogue," and it is beneath the purpose of the English-Jewish press to encourage such opinion. The picture and the artist are known as great and will live at least as long as fools contend and vandals spatter ink on paintings.

The Singular Yiddish Poet

BY JOSEPH WOLFF

Looking at the big, strong figure of Yehoash, his genial, kindly face, the lack of affected pose and the spirit of broad democracy that one instinctively associates with him, the whimsical question comes to mind, why does he wear a flowing green tie? The thought is so out of place when speaking of one of the most inspired and powerful of Jewish poets who have remained faithful to the language and soul of their people. But thoughts are uncontrollable vagrants that refuse to be bounden to any authority. That flowing green tie starts a humorous little stream in one's mind that try as you will, keeps intruding in a serious manner. But genius and a poet's license! There are mysteries indefinable and impervious to inquiry.

Will it be surprising to you to learn that almost all of Yehoash's works have been written within the last sixteen years and that he really began to write when he was thirty-one? Yet such is the case. Yehoash's first poems were written in Hebrew in his early boyhood. Later he came under the influence of Peretz, and from that time he dates the beginning of his career. Incidentally, Yehoash dates the birth of Yiddish literature from Peretz. The writers who came before Peretz he respects as the bards and minstrels of the Jewish race; but the writer who first founded a Yiddish literature was Peretz and the group of young writers whom he developed. For Peretz was one of those rare "professionals" that take as much interest in the works of others as they do in their own.

"There is no such literary atmosphere now as there was about that circle that gathered around Peretz," Yehoash will tell you. "There was then, none of the modern pettiness and narrowness of litterateurs. The discovery of a new, young talent was to him as great as inspiring, as his own creation of a masterpiece."

After working some months on the "Yiddische Bibliothek" under the pen-name of Yehoash, he came to America, where, with the exception of occasional trips to Europe, he has ever since remained.

He had not been very long in America when he gave up writing and became an ordinary working man. Why? A temporary yielding to circumstantial feelings. He had made his way to America with the hopes and dreams of enthusiastic youth; but when he came to watch the fabric of his dreams against the realities of New York life the resultant disappointments persuaded him that it would not be a great loss to literature if Yehoash would not write.

For the next ten years thereafter there hardly a profession that Yehoash did not work at. He listened to the advice of one of his "bosses" who continually told him to "make himself useful" and almost became prosperous in business. He was at this in Denver, where he met Jacob Marinoff, now the editor of the "Kundes." Marinoff had heard of "Yehoash" at the time of the publication of his poems in the "Yiddische Bibliothek." The poems were strikingly different from those written by his contemporaries. His set of "Love Poems" and "Nature Poems" as compared to the poems of Rosenfeld and Bismuth, whose works were characteristic of the Jewish poetry of those days, were very peculiar and had attracted attention. In addition, the name "Yehoash" bore with it an uncommon atmosphere of grandeur and dignity that caught the reader's eye and imagination. "Yehoash" is not a fictitious name, as many believe. It is his real name and a name that has been attached to the Bloomgardens for many generations. When the youthful poet Bloomgarten, therefore, sought for a nom-de-plume with which to cover his first efforts, "Yehoash" naturally suggested itself to him. And very wisely, as it proved later on.

For this name remained in the memory of readers long after the poems themselves had slipped into the background of their memories. And so it happened that Marinoff remembered "Yehoash" more than ten years after he had read his works. When he found that the poet had ceased to write, Marinoff would give him no peace. He tried to revive his enthusiasm for writing once more. For a long time Yehoash resisted, but the predestined had to be, and at the age of thirty, Yehoash made his second debut into poetry.

His success since then has been simply in accordance with his genius. But though he has in New York (where he now resides) everything that would make another man happy—fame, friends and income, he is not satisfied. He cannot find himself in this foreign atmosphere. His nationalistic instinct longs for Palestine, the land where he was forced out by the war.

In the natural order of things and articles, selections from Yehoash's poems should here occupy a far greater space than that given to the biographical sections, but Yehoash wrote in Yiddish, and most of the English translations that have been made of some of his works are, well—of a kind that even the prosaic soul of a journalist cannot abide.

However, here are three:

Angelus

The sunshine melts away in twilight golden-red;
From multitude of liars creep night's pervading shadows;

The leas and meads are hushed in silence gray and dread,
And stalk leans upon stalk in dusky, grassy meadows.

But hark! . . . a distant chime and semi-darkness yields
To clear and ringing peals that flow from wood and fields.

And solemnly descends a chaste and snow-white dove,
And carries mystic blessings from the spheres above.

The air is filled with heart-felt, mild and tender grace,
I hear the God of Love, God of a stranger's race.

Ding-dong . . . Ding dong . . . unwillingly I drink the wine
Of consolation of a God that is not mine.

—Translated by Elbert Aidline.

Blower-Offerings

Through many a pretty flower bed,
The wild war-horse did wade;
Of many a lovely rose's head
An untimely end hath made.

Yet, dying, these same flowers prayed,
That blessed he might be;
"Trample and destroy," they said,
"But go to victory."

—Translated by Belle Robins.

The Harp of David

When the night her vision is weaving,
With moonlight and starlight far warp,
The King, in his chamber arises
And wakens the voice of his harp.

He sees not the hands of him playing,
He hears but a melody sweet;
He hears but the heart of him beating
With a musical, magical beat.

He gazes out through a window
On the world in beauty bedight;
Forgotten the throne and the sceptre
In a holier, higher delight!

He sees like a picture before him
The quiet green fields where he spent
His youthful years as a shepherd,
His only palace, a tent;

His sceptre the flute of the shepherd,
Carved of the cedar-wood hard;
His fortune and lonely treasure,
The soulful pride of the bard!

Then pours he his soul on the harp-string,
Forgetful of sorrow and pain,

The old, gray monarch of Judah
Is a youthful singer again!

British Colonial Secretary Replies to Arabs

Mr. Amery, the Colonial Secretary of Great Britain, during his present visit to Palestine, received an Arab delegation, who presented to him the complaints of the Arabs that the British Government broke its pledge to King Hussein and that the Zionists are swamping the country with their new immigrants. In the course of his reply, Mr. Amery said that the Arab peasants were considerably better off now than before the war, largely due to the development of the country by Jews and the large sums of money spent by the Zionists in Palestine. "Five years ago," he said, "there were only 55,000 Jews and 570,000 Arabs in Palestine. To-day, there are 110,000 Jews and 750,000 Arabs, a fact which proves that the growth of the Arab population has become bigger despite the Jewish immigration. In any case, I cannot understand your fears of Jewish immigration, which can only benefit the whole population. As for the pledges given to King Hussein, they were fulfilled. In Palestine, however, a double pledge was given to the Jews and to the Arabs, and Great Britain intends to fulfill both pledges. As regards a representative council, the country can have it as soon as the population expresses a desire to participate in it on the conditions of the terms of the mandate."

A Jewish deputation also visited Mr. Amery and presented him with two documents, one asking for a quick realization of the Palestine Communities Ordinance and another in which it was complained that the government remove the restrictions against immigration and about the failure of the government to allot to the Jews an adequate share of the Crown lands, for which the mandate provides. Mr. Amery promised to hasten to issue the Communities

Ordinance and to examine the situation as to educational grants to Jewish schools. He also thought that more facilities should be given to relatives of Palestinians to enter the country. He advised the Jews to build their national home systematically and strongly, with deep roots rather than in a superficial and quick manner.

He expressed himself in the highest terms of praise of the work done by the Zionist organization in Palestine and said that he was certain that Jews and Arabs will soon find a way of co-operating in the rebuilding of the land. He said that the differences between the two nationalities are noticed only in Jerusalem, while in other towns there is a more friendly feeling and a more hearty co-operation between them.

At a dinner given by the British Keren Hayesod to Sir Alfred Mond recently in London, Major Ormsby-Gore, Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, declared that the Government was unwavering in its fidelity to the cause of Zionism, which is now part of the public law of Europe. He also spoke very highly of the work accomplished through the instrumentality of the Keren Hayesod and said that every penny spent by the Jews in the rebuilding of Palestine has been of great help to the British administration. James Rothschild, who acted as toastmaster at the function, expressed his satisfaction at the fact that both Judge Julian Mack and Dr. Stephen S. Wise have returned to the Zionist fold and are ready to work for the Keren Hayesod.

According to official statistics recently made public, there are now in Palestine 399 factories, 119 of which are in Tel Aviv, 107 in Jerusalem, 29 in Haifa and 84 in other parts of the country.

LAND SETTLEMENT IN RUSSIA

The Executive Office of the O.R.T.

Russia that groups of Jewish families are organizing themselves all over Russia for the purpose of settling in agricultural work. The Jewish Colonization Society is working in Russia for the purpose of settling Jewish families in the Crimea and in the Caucasus.

registered as desirous of engaging in agriculture. The government intends during the year to settle 2,000 Jewish families on the land. In the Crimea, 585 Jewish families and 240 Haluzim have settled in twenty-three different places and the relations between them and the Tartar native population are most friendly. The Jewish colonies in Crimea are at present cultivating an area of about 48,600 acres. The Joint Distribution Committee is prepared to settle 350 Jewish families this year in Crimea. Small groups of Jewish colonists have also settled on land in Turkestan and Kuban.

Mr. David Brown, of Detroit, who has been visiting Russia, left Moscow in company of Dr. Joseph Rosen, the representative of the Joint, to visit the Jewish settlements in the Crimea. It is expected that the Society will be able to settle a number of Jewish families in the Crimea.

for Jewish Land Settlement, Soviet officials tried to impress upon the assembly that the Communist Party in supporting this movement has no other motive except to help the Jews of Russia in their present desperate economic situation. There was no attempt to use the present scheme in order to discredit Zionism or to gain influence for the Communist organization. The Society would never be allowed to become a field for political or social struggles.

The Federation of Jewish ex-soldiers in Germany, at a recent meeting discussed the advisability of settling Jews on land in Germany. A representative of the O.R.T. offered the assistance of that organization in this work. The proposition was looked upon with much favour by the members of the Federation.

Watch His Milk

A baby's health—often its very life—depends on the nourishing quality of its milk. And remember this—the best of milk loses its wholesomeness rapidly when exposed to a temperature warmer than 50 degrees. A well-iced refrigerator is the only safe place to keep milk. Don't take chances with your baby's health. Take ice regularly.

May we modestly suggest that Creed's have that feeling and that it will find expression in the remodelling of your fur coat at a cost no greater than that asked by lesser artists?

We will be glad to make helpful suggestions.

FACTS ABOUT TEA SERIES—No. 8

The Consumption of Tea

Tea as a beverage is used in nearly every country in the world. It is estimated over 200 billion cups are consumed annually. Australia leads in tea drinking with an annual per capita consumption of about nine pounds, which means that every Australian consumes from six to eight cups of tea every day. The consumption per capita in England is 8½ lbs., and in Canada nearly 5 lbs. In the United States, it is less than 1 lb., but this is largely because Americans have not been able to get fine teas until comparatively recently. "SALADA" is considered one of the choicest blends on the market, and is the largest selling tea in either United States or Canada.

CLAIMANT OF FAMOUS OLD "ELI, ELI" TELLS STORY ON WITNESS STAND

Does "Eli, Eli," the well known Jewish lament, belong to Jewish folk-song or to Jacob Koppel Sandler? The jury in Mr. Sandler's suit against Joseph P. Katz, a music publisher, for infringement of copyright, will be asked to determine the question.

Mr. Sandler, who is sixty-seven, says he composed the song thirty years ago while he was a director in a Yiddish theatre on the Bowery. In the trial of his suit before Federal District Judge Knox, he related its history.

Sandler said he wrote "Eli, Eli" while he was at the Windsor Theatre on the Bowery to dramatize the character of a poor Jewish girl who was persecuted for her religion. His notes it overnight, he said, and it was a success although the play in which it was used failed.

Sandler testified that he left the theatre shortly after that to work in a synagogue and for twenty-one years heard nothing of "Eli, Eli." During that period he said he had a hard struggle to make a living.

Then in 1917 his daughter heard Miss Sophie Braslau sing the song at the Metropolitan Opera House, where it was received enthusiastically. The daughter rushed home with the news, and Sandler's interest in the song was revived.

Sandler testified that he had been inspired to write the song by the words of the Twenty-Second Psalm: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? . . . O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent."

Jennie Moscovitz, an actress, testified that she heard the original composition sung by Miss Sophia Carp at the Windsor in 1896.

Counsel for the music publisher, Katz, contends that Sandler did not compose the original song; that it really is an old Russian-Jewish folk-song, and that Sandler hence could not copyright it. Mr. Katz testified he had heard his father sing it forty years ago in Russia, and that he had heard parts of the music used in the Jewish ritual.

Sandler, who lives now at No. 1524 Seabury Place, the Bronx, values the song at $500,000, and he wants an accounting of the royalties received.

instinct of curiosity. It is evident to every thinking person that if any of us tried to live without any inhibitions and moral bridges we would soon find ourselves in much more serious conflicts than we find ourselves when we inhibit and repress our animal nature.

In the vortex of all these disturbing factors we must look for the causes of youth's unrest and even wild revolt. But instead of trying to understand the ailments of youth, finding out its causes with a view of discovering its cures, we remain satisfied to denounce the young generation as if they were the devil's children instead of our own, as if it were all their fault instead of, as is the case, the result of conditions which are not of their making.

It is only fair to ask what are our schools, churches, synagogues and other agencies doing to help youth in this storm and stress. Our educational institutions are doing very little to help youth. In response to the demands of an industrial civilization of which they are only the tools, they teach for the most part a materialistic outlook on life. Our modern education is not conducive to the development of ideals, nor is it primarily concerned with character-building. It is vocational, utilitarian and professional instead of being broadly cultural and idealistic—instead of stressing the humanities and training for leisure and for the making of a life as well as for making a living.

Our churches and synagogues and religious schools with their theological dogmatism and obscurantism, their unfriendliness to science, and their lack of sympathy with changing morality, their aloofness from the great social and economic problem of modern life call in vain to our youth for loyalty. Religion is hoary and old—youth is young and virile. They ask our young people to be loyal to the past at the expense of the future. Has the dead hand of our ancestors, reaching out from the past, a right to stifle freedom and youth? The past, says our youth, has meaning only in so far as it can serve us to build our future, and in only so far as the traditions of the past can square themselves with our modern ideas of reason and science, will they be acceptable. In this contention of our critical youth there is much justice.

And are the church and synagogue turning a listening ear and a sympathetic heart to the revolt of youth? They are not. They are satisfying themselves with hurling denunciations of hell and brimstone when the youth refuses loyalty to traditionalism.

We in Jewry who expect our youth to be with us and for us must change our tactics and our attitude. We need the youth; without them we are cut off and undone. Our position at present is critical because our youth is ignorant of Jewish ideals and ideas and apathetic and indifferent to our problems.

Have we not asked our youth to take too much for granted? What have we done to educate them in the culture and faith, the language and literature, the philosophy and ethics of our people? What have we done to show them that our faith and culture do not rest on myths and miracles, but on reason and can stand the challenge of modern science? We have called for blind loyalty, we have preached about Jewish martyrdom, of blood and persecution, forgetting that those who died in this way knew for what and why they were dying, whilst our youth sees no reason for making sacrifices because of its ignorance of the Jew and Judaism.

The appeals for loyalty we have been making to the Jewish youth have fallen on deaf ears and we are to blame. We have reckoned neither with the causes which produced youth's ailments, nor have we developed the process of re-education to win back our youth from its indifference and apathy. Some of our critical and thinking youth, yearning for some ideals to pursue, have been unable to wait till we wake up, and have yielded themselves to outside causes and movements. They are everywhere to be found excepting in the ranks of Judaism and under the banner of the Jew.

What we require is re-education. Re-education for the Jewish leaders, re-education for the Jewish youth, a call to loyalty, not on account of the past of the Jew. No. But because of the future of the Jew and Judaism. We must, through education, prove to our young people that they need not take their Judaism on blind faith, nor the Jewish people because of anti-Semitism and discrimination. Judaism is not a misfortune of birth, it is a blessing to which birth predisposes us. Our people are not the world's pariah, but a great intellectual nation in whom God and the ages have stored up great spiritual and ethical potentialities which the world requires. I call the Jewish youth to Jewish loyalty on the ground that in this way alone lie complete freedom and true self-expression. "To thine own self be true—thou canst not then be false to any man."

How can we reach our youth so that they will hear our call, many despondent voices ask.

Forward with youth is my answer, not backward with tradition.

Set our social house in order which is so much out of order.

Stop scolding youth and begin to understand it.

Ask ourselves how we can make Judaism the faith of our children instead of how we can force our fathers' faith on our children.
